

Tudor LankellyChase South West Partnership

The Tudor Trust and the LankellyChase Foundation (TLC) are working together to support voluntary organisations working within the criminal justice field in the South West of England. Over the past three years the partnership has supported the South West's criminal justice voluntary sector with 39 grants totalling £1,500,000. Good projects have developed from this and to build on this success TLC will continue to support this work for a further two years.

Having held two informative consultation days with criminal justice voluntary organisations, we are now with Clinks, in the process of appointing a new Voluntary and Community Sector Manager - a post that will build on the work undertaken by Martin Sollars over the past three years. A clear message from the consultation was the need to improve local communication and networking opportunities and TLC will work with Clinks to develop this.

TLC has a grant fund of £1million to distribute and is looking to fund partnership work. This can also go towards the development of partnerships as well as existing partnerships. Grants of up to three years duration will be available and it will be open to applicants to define what they mean by partnership. We hope that over the coming eighteen months we will agree between 25-30 grants.

Applicants will need a clear strategy showing how their partnership work fits in with external factors such as NOMS commissioning, improving organisational sustainability and strengthening services to clients.

TLC wants to learn about the effectiveness of your work and to facilitate a sharing of knowledge and experience amongst the sector. For this reason you will need to tell us show how you plan to monitor and evaluate so that we and others can share in the learning.
